

Women of the 1885 Resistance

Compiled by Lawrence Barkwell

Louis Riel Institute<sup>1</sup>

One cannot have a complete appreciation of the 1885 Northwest Resistance without considering the women of the resistance and the matriarchal nature of Metis society. This paper lists the spouses of the resistance fighters, most of these women were also the sisters or daughters, mothers or aunts of other resistance fighters.

In 1885, Canada was administering the Northwest Territory while ignoring petitions and entreaties from the local population for effective political representation. At the time Metis Aboriginal rights had not been recognized and no negotiations were planned. The Metis of the region sought to negotiate their rights for a land base just as they had done to bring Manitoba into Confederation in 1870. The Metis had sent many petitions to Ottawa to outline their grievances and no answers had been forthcoming. After the government imposed taxes on Metis woodlots and began giving away Metis lands to the Prince Albert Colonization Company, the Metis began to take up arms. Their subsequent resistance was met with the mobilization of the North West Mounted Police and a Militia under the command of General Middleton. The Metis were defeated at Batoche in the spring of 1885. This was the first war fought by the Dominion of Canada. The Metis participating in the Resistance included fighting men, women who were the nurses, cooks and quartermasters, as well as boys who were messengers and foragers for ammunition and other community members who provided food, clothing, carts and horses. The deprivations that the women underwent during and after the fighting were severe. Many died of tuberculosis shortly thereafter as a direct result of their living conditions.

Over 300 women are included on the list that follows.

Monet dit Bellehumeur, Marguerite (1861-1886). Marguerite was the wife of Louis Riel. She was at her husband's side during the battle of 1885 until Riel surrendered May 15, to Middleton's scouts. Cold and hungry, Marguerite and her children hid in caves near Batoche while awaiting word from Louis. Instead Louis' brother Joseph appeared and took Marguerite and her children to live with Riel's mother in St. Boniface, Manitoba. Weakened by the events of Batoche and her husband's imprisonment, the premature birth and death of her third child added to her grief. Marguerite's suffering continued with Louis' execution for his involvement in the Resistance of 1885. After his execution she stayed with his family in St. Vital. She died of tuberculosis in May of 1886, the final blow dealt to a greatly diminished existence.
