

A Judy for Olive.—Page 10
 The Finch case. —Page 3
 The Anastasia case.—Page 3
 Lake research funds are needed. —Page 5
 Readers' views on the economy. —Page 6
 Why 10 years for a subway? —Page 7
 Glenn Gould at Stratford. —Page 8
 Best-dressed women.—Page 9
 News from zoos. —Page 13
 The Bobcat may remain Canadian. —Page 13
 Scott Young tells about public demand. —Page 14
 Canada's a siren to some industrialists. —Page 18

Mrs. Olive Dickason

—Globe and Mail, Erik Schock.

Judy for Fashion Reports Awarded Globe and Mail

Judy—an award presented annually by the Canadian garment industry for outstanding achievement—was won by The Globe and Mail last night for the second consecutive year.

For best coverage of women's fashion news by an Ontario daily newspaper, the Garment Salesmen Ontario Market, award sponsors, rewarded Olive Dickason, fashion editor of The Globe Magazine, with the Judy gold trophy.

The awards, first presented last year, went to 10 other winners of various categories. More than 900 fashion experts, clothing manufacturers and salesmen gathered at the Royal York Hotel for the Judy Awards Dinner.

A special award for outstanding service rendered the international garment industry was given the National Association of Women's and Children's Apparel Salesmen, a U.S. organization. Winners are chosen from nominations submitted by salesmen in the garment industry.

Other recipients and their categories were:

Wool Bureau of Canada, for its part in a career girl promotion that appeared in The Globe and Mail;

Kitchener-Waterloo Record, for consistently good coverage of fashion news;

London Free Press, honorable mention for a recent fashion supplement;

Pride O'Glen Knitwear, of Vancouver, for the best single or continuous merchandising program of women's and children's clothing;

Kiddies Togs, of Montreal, for presenting an original Canadian garment in the children's wear category;

Cleda's Ladies Wear, of Woodstock, in the retail adult specialty shop category;

Schoolgirl's Shop, of Toronto, in the children's wear specialty shop category;

Goudies Department Store, of Montreal, for three outstanding promotions in the department store competition;

Town and Country Shops, of Toronto, for a year-long program in the adult chain store category.