He acquired a land grant in 1859, and by 1861 had erected a small dwelling named "The Hermitage." His residence was later incorporated into a larger two-storey dwelling of log construction in 1878, and retained its name. It stood on the north side of present-day Roblin Boulevard, at Lot 1 of Headingley. Their house was open to many, and frequented by those recuperating from illness. During the 1869-1870 Red River Resistance, he took up arms against the Métis.

[21] Pallot was a member of the 1870 Red River Expedition. In the late 1800s he acquired lots 85-89 known as the St. Charles Prairie as his own private hunting preserve, he donated this land to the Department of National Defence in 1911 as a military training ground this then became the St. Charles Ranges. (west of the perimeter and north of Assiniboia Downs.)

[22] Lots 90 to 93 were formerly known as the Assiniboine Memorial Park Cemetery, this cemetery in west Winnipeg, complete with mausoleum and columbarium, was opened around August 1929 on Lots 90-93 in the Parish of St. Charles. As of late 1950, its name was changed to Chapel Lawn Memorial Gardens.
